

What is True?

Truth isn't measured in inches or meters,

Nor teaspoons, tablespoons, ounces or liters.

It is easy to lose and hard to find,

And has long eluded the human mind.

Truth changes with time, every minute and hour,

And is easily twisted by those who have power.

It's a world-wide debate, never resolved.

An impossible puzzle to never be solved.

Truth has the power to set people free,

From a room of darkness without a key.

It has power to save the human race,

Or wipe it completely, from the earth's face.

So how do we know what's wrong and what's right,

What leads us toward darkness and what to the light?

Who chooses what's adamant or absolute,

And what crumbles without, foundation or root?

We must search throughout life until we conceive,

An outline of truth and what we believe.

We must decide for ourselves what is truly truth.
